

When a Covid-19 vaccine is approved, will your community be ready?

Grants to help you plan for — and deliver — the vaccine are available right now.

Applying for the grant is simple. Here's what you need to know:

Undoing the damage COVID-19 has done to our families, schools, jobs, businesses, and the very fabric of our communities hinges on getting as many people as possible vaccinated in a process that is clear, fast, and fair.

Community Data Platforms (CDP), with support from Schmidt Futures, has grant funding to provide a limited number of community institutions with data analytics and visualization tools — not just to help distribute the vaccine quickly and equitably, but to create public-facing dashboards so everyone can see and understand the speed, the effectiveness, and the fairness of the process.

Applications are due by October 15th. The application is one page long, with a few simple, straightforward questions. Grants will be awarded by October 30th. The grants can increase your investment by as much as 50%.

Dr. Robert Redfield, the Director of the Centers for Disease Control, reminds us:

"We need to make every effort to ensure--not only that any vaccine is allocated in an equitable fashion--but also that the public actually sees that it's equitable, fair, and transparent."

- We can help you put CDP's powerful data analytics tools to work to describe 100% of your population reliably so vaccine recipients can be prioritized — first responders, high-risk workers in healthcare facilities, essential front-line workers, older adults...and every other single person in your community.
- We can help you reach more people faster by leveraging mobility data which shows how your population moves through the community — so information and the vaccine itself can be positioned smartly.
- We can help you monitor who's missing out on getting vaccinated—and why ...
- And we can help you show all your constituencies and stakeholders the thinking behind who's getting the vaccine — when, and in what order, and why — so that no community, group, or individual is left out.

When the process is complete and COVID-19 is in a manageable retreat, you can be secure in the knowledge that you used the best possible evidence and analysis to advance community health and recovery.

Lives are at stake. The reputations and legacies of communities, institutions, and individual leaders are stake.
